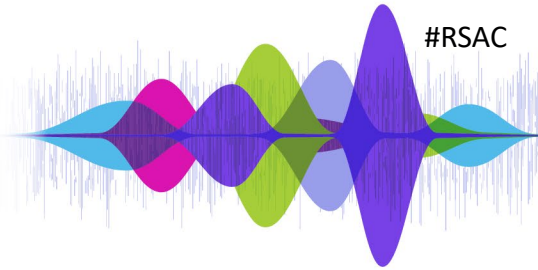
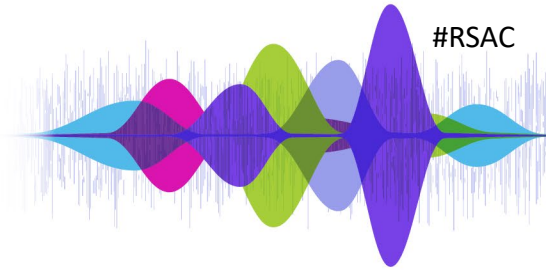
Apply What You Have Learned Today



- In the short term, consider:
  - Does your organization have effective practices, policies, and procedures around incident information sharing?
    - Is your organization's posture towards information sharing with other organizations, industry groups, and government clearly defined and widely known?
    - Covering both the receipt and dissemination of information?
    - Are policies and practices formalized, or subject to change should key personnel depart?
  - Is your organization an active participant of sector-specific or other information sharing bodies?
    - Anecdotally, we know of many companies that typically take a more passive role.

Apply What You Have Learned Today



- Depending on the maturity of your organization's information sharing practices and risk profile, consider:
  - Having internal discussions and tabletops to establish comfort level and protocols around external information sharing.
  - Clarifying your organization's specific incident or threat information needs and the priority level of this information.
  - Identifying critical third party dependencies for your organization and your sector.
  - Joining or increasing participation with information sharing bodies (private sector and government), including in tabletop exercises or other group discussions to improve sector-wide alignment.
